The artist's ideas are about perception... They are about limits and categories: ephemeral as opposed to substantive, profusion vs. waste. They are about the recording of the re-ordering of substances. Tied-in with this are ideas of circularity, the illusion of appearances... Hill predetermines the presence of air, light, weight, density and accumulation to re-instate and re-vitalize the space around each of her objects. Her work is about many things, but it touches on the recording of ephemera, the beauty of appearances and of cross-referenced accumulated detail. Her homespun materials and repeated mark-making create visual hymns to the powers of repeated movements and gestures. The rhythms of Hill's re-circulated materials appearing in different contexts display a capacity for artmaking which is intellectually curious and elegantly resolved without undue mannerism. Hill's works seem to be the vibrant residues, the end-result of a dialogue with haptic (that is, tactile) space.
